The lamentably bad luck of Pat Donovan, the former Washington manager, with the Brooklyn team is causing a lot of comment in baseball circles. This is doing Pat an injustice, for, outside of Lumley and Jordan, the Brooklyn team is composed of a most mediocre bunch of talent, and why anybody should pick the team to finish up in the race is a mystery.

When Donovan took charge of the club last season it looked like a minor league bunch. Under Pat's skilled handling Lumley and Jordan developed into stars of the first magnitude, but two stars are not enough to put a team in the first flight. Barring the two big fellows, Donovan has nothing. McCarthy, Maloney, and Casey are Chicago discards. Chance and Murphy traded these three men and some other useless baggage for Jimmy Sheppard. One star player is worth a whole raft of ordinary players. Cantillon could get a nine of second-raters for Patten. But this kind of talent can't win ball games. The winning teams of both leagues are composed of high-grade men in every department of the game. Donovan's troubles are the natural result of expecting too much of a man.

The New York State League opened its twelfth consecutive season last week, with indications pointing to the most prosperous year ever experienced by this compact and thriving organization. After several weeks of training the various teams are reported to be in excellent condition for the hard battle for the pennant that is sure to follow. Managers of the teams report that they have secured the best talent possible for a Class B league, and predict that the race will be close from opening to closing of the season.

Three changes have been made in the management of the clubs. Henry Ramsey is the new head of the Scranton team, champions of last year, succeeding Manager Ashenback, who is now directing the St. Paul team of the American Association. Charles Dooley, who has had years of experience on the baseball diamond, succeeds John Lawlor as manager of the Utica team. Abe Lezotte, a veteran, will pilot the Wilkesbarre club, succeeding Mike Donovan, who will hold down third base for the Troy team. M. J. Doherty will again manage the Albany team; Howard J. Earl, Amsterdam, Johnstown, and Gloversville; Robert Drury, Binghamton; T. C. Griffin, Syracuse; John J. O'Brien, Troy.

The league has adopted a salary limit of $2,250 a month, and, according to John Farrell, president of the organization, this limit will be lived up to. Mr. Farrell, who is also secretary of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, has been its president continuously since its inception.

Baseball men predict that Jimmy Collins will be in control of the Boston American team again before long.

Collins has struck his stride, and is clouting the ball hard. He started the season high in flesh, but has managed to work off a big slice of his surplus avoirdupois in the last month, and is now reported to be as trim as a greyhound. This means that he should soon be playing the same brilliant fielding game that characterized his work when he was the king of third sackers.

When Collins comes into his own, Bob Unglaub, the present manager of the Boston team, will find himself up against it. Young, Criger, Dineen, Parent, Tannehill, Ferris, and the rest of the Boston veterans are with Collins to a man. If the real reason of George Huff's sudden resignation as manager were known, it would probably be found that this clannishness had something to do with it.

There are cliques and gangs in every ball club, and there is small question that the "strong men" of the Boston team are with Collins.

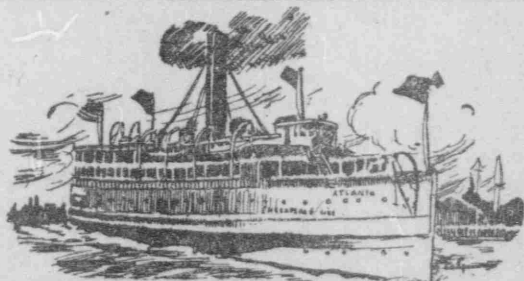

Wine drinking is one of the incidentals to racing on the New York race tracks. It is quite a big issue, too, judged by the amount of money spent in the traffic. After every race there is a merry popping of corks in the cafe. Race track crowds spend at least $2,000 a day for wine. The wine clerk employed by McGrath has ordered a consignment of champagne based on an average consumption of 500 quarts per day. On Saturdays and big days, especially if the weather is warm, the amount spent by a New York racing crowd on the "fizz water" is considerably over $2,000.
